(Image credit: g0d4ther | Shutterstock) It's important to know how to find your Windows 10 product key at a moment's notice. Recovering after a system wipe, building a new PC for fun or just replacing a broken one — you never know when you'll need to reinstall your copy of Windows. And since the product key is needed to utilize all of Windows 10's features as well as receive crucial updates, placing it in a secure location for later use is wise. If you do happen to misplace your Windows 10 product key, don't worry. The physical key isn't actually needed thanks to a Command Prompt; with a few clicks here and there, you'll be able to pull up the missing key on your PC. Take a look at our guide below as it explains the step-by-step process. Note that the following instructions are for people who either purchased a physical copy of Windows 10 or bought the digital version through an authorized reseller. If you purchased a digital copy via the Microsoft Store, then Windows 10 is connected to your Microsoft account. All you'd have to do is log into Microsoft after reinstalling Windows 10 to get back up to speed. If you bought a computer with Windows 10 already installed, like a Microsoft Surface, the product key is baked into the firmware and cannot be pulled up. 1. Click the Windows search box and type in Command Prompt. (Image credit: Kenneth Seward Jr. | Future) 2. Once the Command Prompt entry pops up, right click that option and select "Run as administrator." Click "Yes" when prompted. (Image credit: Kenneth Seward Jr. | Future) 3. Once the Command Prompt window opens, type or copy and paste the following command: `wmic path SoftwareLicensingService get OA3xOriginalProductKey` This is case-sensitive, so make sure you copy it exactly as it's written or it won't work. After you've typed/pasted it into the Command Prompt window, press Enter. (Image credit: Kenneth Seward Jr. | Future) 4. Provided you've done everything correctly, your Windows product key should appear under the command you typed in. Be sure to write it down and place it somewhere safe. (Image credit: Kenneth Seward Jr. | Future) And there you have it. One hidden Windows 10 product key just waiting to be verified. The great thing about this method of retrieval is that it can be done at any time. Even if your PC dies you won't have to worry because Windows 10 can run without the product key, just not at full capacity. All you'd have to do is install Windows 10 again, use the Command Prompt to find the key and then verify it online. Read on for a quick explanation of these terms. It's a Form of Software Copy Protection A Windows product key is a string of numbers similar to a serial number. It's used by Microsoft as way to prevent users (or multiple users) from activating and using Windows on more computers than the license agreement permits. A Windows product key can be thought of as a form of software copy protection. It's a String of 25 Numbers A Windows product key is a string of 25 numbers, separated every fifth number by a dash. An example of a Windows product key would look like this: `xxxx-xxxx-xxxx-xxxx-xxxx` It's possible that some of the characters in a Windows product key might be letters rather than numbers. Also, if a Windows product key becomes damaged or unreadable, Microsoft Support can help users get a new one. You Might Not Have a Product Key Some users of Windows 10 won't need a product key to activate their software. In these cases, activation is performed digitally, with a digital license or digital entitlement. For example, a user who upgraded an activated copy of Windows 7 to Windows 10 for free may not have a product key for Windows 10. Locating a Physical Product Key Locating a physical printed product key isn't always a straightforward process, but it's easier when you know where to look. If you purchased Windows 7, 8, 8.1 or 10 software from a retailer, then the Windows product key should be printed inside the Windows packaging, on a label or card. If you purchased a new computer with Windows pre-installed, the product key may be printed on a certificate of authenticity on your machine, or somewhere in your new computer's packaging. Microsoft Office Uses Product Keys, Too Microsoft's popular Office software also uses product keys for activation. Office will install on a computer, but won't activate and be usable until the product key is entered. Like a Windows product key, an Office product key is also a 25-number sequence in this form: `xxxx-xxxx-xxxx-xxxx-xxxx` MORE FROM QUESTIONSANSWERED.NET Software Patches Patch management is important to ensure safety, security, and operational integrity of industrial control products and systems.
